DISTRICT COURT STRIKES DOWN OFFICE FOR CIVIL RIGHTS 2016 HIPAA RIGHT TO ACCESS GUIDANCE APPLICATION TO THIRD PARTIES

February 4, 2020

By: Brooke Bennett Aziere and Amanda M. Wilwert

On January 23, 2020, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia (“D.C. District Court”) entered an order invalidating provisions of the Modification to the HIPAA Privacy, Security, and Enforcement Rules (“2013 Omnibus Rule”) and the United States Department of Health and Human Services (“HHS”) Office for Civil Rights (“OCR”) subsequent 2016 Guidance related to the assessment of fees for copies of paper and electronic protected health information (“PHI”). Five days later, on January 28, 2020, consistent with the D.C. District Court’s Order, HHS OCR released an important notice explaining the right to access fee limitation will apply only to an individual’s request for access to his/her own records. It will not apply to an individual’s request to transmit records to a third party.

Under the HIPAA Privacy Rule, healthcare providers must provide an individual the right to access his/her PHI (subject to limited exceptions). Healthcare providers are permitted to charge a “reasonable, cost-based fee” for providing copies. In 2009, the Health Information Technology for Economic and Clinical Health Act (“HITECH Act”) amended this right to access rule by creating the “third-party directive”—which permits an individual to direct copies of PHI (maintained in an electronic format only) to a third party. The 2013 Omnibus Rule expanded the third-party directive to include individual requests for copies of PHI stored in any format. Finally, in 2016, HHS OCR published guidance which states the “reasonable, cost-based fee” limitation applies to an individual’s request to direct PHI to a third party. Georgia-based Ciox Health, a medical record retrieval company, filed suit against HHS alleging portions of the 2013 Omnibus Rule and 2016 Guidance “unlawfully, unreasonably, arbitrarily, and capriciously” sought to restrict the fees that can be charged by healthcare providers and their business associates for providing copies of PHI and violated the Federal Administrative Procedures Act ("APA").

The D.C. District Court found HHS' expansion of the third-party directive in the 2013 Omnibus Rule requiring the delivery of PHI to third parties regardless of the records' format arbitrary and capricious because it went beyond the statutory requirements set by Congress in the HITECH Act. The D.C. District Court held that the 2016 Guidance broadening the "reasonable, cost-based fee" limitation to third-party directives was effectively a legislative rule the Agency failed to subject to the notice and comment periods in violation of the Federal APA.

The D.C. District Court's Order effectively now closes the loophole attorneys, insurance companies, and other third parties have been exploiting to obtain copies of PHI under the HIPAA fee limitations. There are two important takeaways for healthcare providers and their business associates:

- The "reasonable, cost-based fee" limitation only applies to requests for access made by an individual (or his/her personal representative) and the PHI must be provided to the individual (or his/her personal representative). The fee limitation does not apply to an individual's request for the healthcare provider or business associate to direct copies of PHI be sent to a third party. This means healthcare providers may charge their standard medical record fee charges in accordance with state law to third parties receiving copies of PHI (e.g., attorney, insurance companies), even if the request appears on its face to be sent by the individual.
- Individuals may request PHI contained in an electronic format be directed to third parties, but the third-party directive does not apply to records maintained in other formats. This means healthcare providers are not obligated to scan paper records to an electronic format in order to send to a third party.

This news came amid OCR's ramped up enforcement efforts of the right to access rule in the past year with two settlements and corrective action plans in 2019. Healthcare providers should revisit their right to access policies and procedures to ensure compliance with the HIPAA Privacy Rule and the D.C. District Court's findings.
