PROFILE

Charles McClellan provides a wide range of client counseling, employee benefits, employment, and commercial litigation services for business, nonprofit, government, and individual clients.

Charles regularly counsels clients and provides training on a wide range of business topics. He advises taxable, tax-exempt, and governmental employers on employee benefit and executive compensation issues, including ERISA and tax-code compliance and the design and administration of welfare benefit plans and qualified and nonqualified pension, retirement savings, and deferred compensation plans. He helps employers draft and revise employee handbooks and advises them on discipline, termination, reduction-in-force, and other employment-related issues. And he advises manufacturing clients on the interpretation, application, and enforcement of supply-chain agreements. Charles also has extensive experience preparing affirmative action plans for federal government contractors, advising them on contractor compliance, and navigating them through OFCCP audits.

In the employment litigation context, Charles handles pre-litigation disputes, including internal investigations and external agency actions, such as by the KHRC, EEOC, OFCCP, as well as administrative, grievance, and arbitration proceedings. He regularly defends employers facing large class and collective actions and litigates traditional, single-plaintiff lawsuits. His experience includes discrimination, wrongful discharge, retaliation, harassment, breach of contract, wage payment, non-compete, labor-management, and ERISA disputes.

Charles also represents parties facing complex commercial disputes. For example, he has litigated disputes over the sale of equipment under the Uniform Commercial Code, the provision of services under a supply agreement, the enforcement of an asset purchase agreement, corporate governance, and zoning for a renewable energy project. Charles enjoys digging into complex matters and zealously advocating for his clients.

Prior to his life as a lawyer, Charles managed logistical operations for a nonprofit in San Francisco and served as the director of an international commodity trading firm. He and his wife are proud parents of four daughters and happy grandparents! Outside of work and family, Charles is active in his church and is an avid college sports fan and television binger.
